The City’s Planning & Development, Public works, Engineering, and Waterworks Departments want input from the subdivision developers and engineers to make Harlingen the most pro-development city in the Rio Grande Valley while maintaining high standards of flood protection, strong infrastructure, and great neighborhoods.

Commissioner Daniel N. Lopez says working together to improve the process will benefit everyone. “We are dedicated to collaborating with developers to produce model subdivision rules that promote further investment in our community.

These are just the first of many steps that will establish that Harlingen is the future for the Rio Grande Valley and the State of Texas.”

News From The City of Harlingen

Mayor Norma Sepulveda says the City is dedicated to making this process easier and more efficient. “Last month I sat down with local engineers and developers to gather feedback on how to improve our development process. The consensus was the need to streamline the development process from application submission to project completion. Leveraging technology, we hope to promote efficiency, transparency, and accountability.”

The City has already taken a major first step by purchasing online software to streamline the permitting process. The software allows developers to track and review their project's status as it efficiently travels through the subdivision process. The software will progressively come online in the coming months benefiting all parties.

The August 29 public meeting will be held at Harlingen City Hall located at 118 East Tyler. All subdivision developers and engineers are welcome as their input is crucial to implementing the best policies and practices to promote efficient and effective growth in the City.
